

Internet Search Activity

Directions: In this activity you will practice distinguishing between relevant and useful sources as opposed to irrelevant and not useful sources. Part of deciding whether something is relevant is by quickly reviewing search results. In the example below, it's May 2019 and a senior in high school is researching "teens' opinions on the effects of vaping." As he is gathering his resources, he needs to decide what information is most relevant for the topic. Write an "R" next to a relevant source, an "I" next to irrelevant source, and an "N" for need more information or not sure. The first source has been determined as an example.

Define relevant: something that is connected to what is happening or being discussed
